New era starts

By DANIEL TANG

FLAGSTONE Estate's stage 12 release has been hailed the end of rural residential development in the Flagstone area and the start of urbanisation.

Knight Frank principal development manager David Eades made the announcement last Friday at the launch of the new stage.

"It's a very exciting time, the birth of a city," he said.

"We are really constructing a whole city, a whole community from the ground up."

The new, average urban lot land size is 700 square metres, with lots ranging from 600 to 1000 square metres.

Mr Eades said the next few stages, 12 to 15, were really a transition before the development ran across the other side of the rail corridor.

"Flagstone will be in a whole new urban format here," he said.

"The future of what we see Flagstone will be for the area begins now."
